National Dairy Shrine Recognizes SDSU Graduate

BROOKINGS, S.D. - The National Dairy Shrine awarded 2014 South Dakota State University graduate Chelsey Johnson with its second place Student Recognition Award during the recent National Dairy Shrine banquet. The recognition is announced annually for seven students nationwide who have shown leadership, passion and accomplishment in the dairy industry.

Johnson, originally from Heron Lake, MN, double-majored in Dairy Production and Agriculture Education, Communication and Leadership, with a Communication specialization, while at SDSU. She also earned minors in Animal Science and Advertising. She credits her education at SDSU, particularly her many professors in agricultural communications and dairy science, with helping her prepare for career success. "Without them, this award would not be possible," she says. "I really appreciate all the faculty at SDSU, who helped me in so many ways."

While at SDSU, Johnson held many collegiate leadership roles in organizations such as the Agricultural Communicators of Tomorrow, Sigma Alpha Sisters in Agriculture Sorority, SDSU Dairy Club and Midwest branch of the American Dairy Association. Johnson earned many top honors as a dairy cattle judge, and competed in the North American Intercollegiate Dairy Challenge. She was awarded the 2014 SDSU Dairy Sciences Forbes Leadership Award, and was a 2011 Minnesota Princess Kay of the Milky Way finalist.

Johnson says she chose SDSU because of all that it offers in dairying. The geographic location in Brookings also brought many benefits to her college education, Johnson says, particularly when preparing for the Intercollegiate Dairy Challenge, a competition between college teams who look at the management of a commercial dairy.

"For the Dairy Challenge, we would prepare by touring and looking at farms in order to increase efficiencies and profitability," she explains. Around Brookings, SD, we had a lot of farms that worked with the university. The SDSU team has done well in national competitions."

Johnson says the SDSU Dairy Club also represented a high point in her time in Brookings.

After graduation, Johnson accepted a position with Accelerated Genetics, in Baraboo, WI, as digital communications coordinator, providing producers with digital genetic management tools.

Established in 1948, the National Dairy Shrine recognizes dairy industry leaders at all levels, with over 18,000 members from all facets of dairy industry. The group annually inducts members into its Hall of Fame during a banquet held as part of World Dairy Expo, recognizes current dairy leaders, and provides scholarships to future dairy leaders.

About the South Dakota State University Dairy Science Department

With expertise in both Dairy Production and Dairy Manufacturing, the South Dakota State University Dairy Science department covers the entire spectrum of the dairy industry; from farm to product. The department is housed in the newly renovated Alfred Dairy Science Hall, attached to which is the new state of the art Davis Dairy Plant. About a mile north of campus the South Dakota State University dairy farm provides the source of milk for well-known SDSU ice cream and cheese products, and is home to some 150 milking Holsteins and Brown Swiss cattle. The Department boasts 100% job placement for our graduates, offers more than $100,000 in scholarships to students and confers Bachelors, Master's and Doctorate degrees.
