

The Bookworm ... For Kids

'Pig' Is Sure To Please

"Pig Kahuna: Who's That Pig?" by Jennifer Sattler; © 2015, Bloomsbury Children's Books. 32 pages

BY TERRI SCHLICHENMEYER

There was a new kid in your play-group today, and he's kind of weird.

He's loud, for one thing. He's always yelling and he acts goofy. Other kids seemed to think he was nice, but you can't imagine ever playing with him.

Maybe he was looking for attention. Maybe you're more the quiet type.

Or, as in the new book "Pig Kahuna: Who's That Pig?" by Jennifer Sattler, maybe you just don't know him very well.

Just like every other Monday in every ordinary week, Fergus and Dink were at the beach. They were collecting seashells and building sand castles when they noticed something that was "anything but ordinary."

It was a girl pig and she was quite fashion-forward in a striped-and-leopard tutu-swimsuit and rhinestone sunglasses. She was making "sand angels" and whistling a tune. And, as Dink noticed, she was very good at standing on her head.

He wanted to go say hello, but Fergus wasn't so sure. The girl pig looked like she just wanted to be left alone.

Certainly, that's what Fergus wanted but Dink ran over to the new pig and introduced himself. She answered "hello" in three different languages, and said her name was Tallulah... then she started walking with Dink and they were coming toward Fergus!

That made Fergus very nervous. He tried to pretend that he was looking for something in the sand, but Tallulah started showing off and Fergus didn't know what to say. He wasn't happy that Dink asked her to play with them, but Fergus was a good sport. It did hurt his feelings when they kind of ignored him, though.

But then — while he was feeling rather awkward and out-of-sorts — Fergus spotted something in the sand. It was a crab that had somehow gotten turned on its back, and crabs hate that. Dink saw it, too, but he didn't know what to do. Tallulah really didn't, either, but she said crabs were very good dancers.

Fergus didn't care about dancing. He didn't want to touch the crab but it needed help and Fergus knew that this was a good chance to save the day...

Everybody likes to be liked, whether on social media or in person — although there's such a thing as trying too hard, which can be awkward. That's even true when you're porcine, as your child will see in "Pig Kahuna: Who's That Pig?"

Even kids who are brimming with self-confidence will understand how Fergus Pig feels when presented with someone who seems to outshine him. Author Jennifer Sattler does a great job conveying that in her words, but her illustrations really bring it home: Fergus has the most appealing facial expressions, telling us exactly what he's thinking. Add Dink's earnest friendliness and Tallulah's hilarious eccentricities, and there you have a winner.

While this book is meant for children ages 3 to 5, I think slightly older kids will get a kick out of it, too. When it's read-to-me time, in fact, "Pig Kahuna: Who's That Pig?" is a book they'll yell for.

SDSU Natural Resource Camp on July 8 & 9

BROOKINGS, S.D. - The South Dakota State University Department of Natural Resource Management is hosting a Natural Resource Camp at the Oak Lake Field Station in Astoria, S.D., on July 8 & 9. The camp is intended for high school students, ages 14-18, who have a strong desire to learn more about natural resources and associated careers.

Camp activities will include bird identification, plant identification, mammal capture, firearm safety training and assessing soil health. Participants will also have an opportunity to learn about lake, stream and wetland ecology and will be able to practice fish research sampling methods.

SDSU Natural Resource Management faculty and graduate students will be working along with South Dakota Game, Fish and Parks conservation officers, and Natural Resource Conservation Service biologists and range management specialists to lead camp activities.

"Our camp is set up to provide attendees with hands-on experience to help them learn more about ecology, environmental science, fisheries, rangelands and wildlife," says Leslie Bilbrey, SDSU Natural Resource Management Instructor and Camp Coordinator. "We will provide students with a small taste of the diverse array of career and research opportunities available in the field of Natural Resource Management in a fun, educational environment. Attendees should be able to walk away from their Natural Resource Camp experience with a better understanding of local natural resources and career paths involving those resources." ■iGrow
