May 2015 Climate Outlook

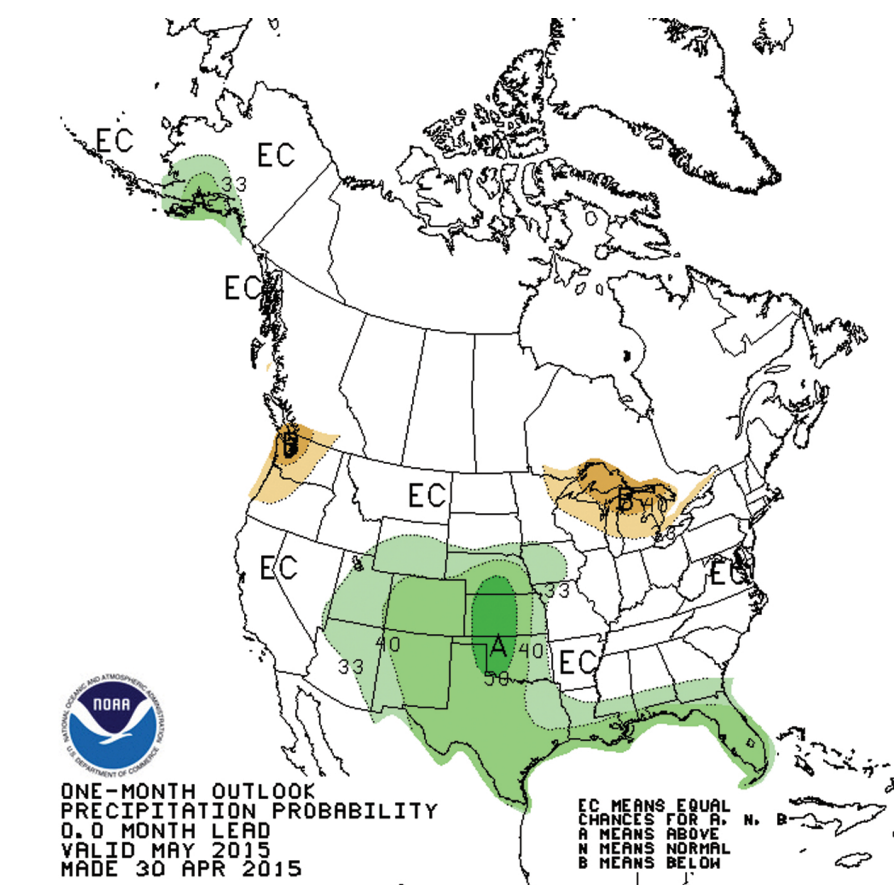

BROOKINGS, S.D. - As South Dakota transitions from April to May, warmer than average air and soil temperatures are prevalent throughout the state. However, spring precipitation has failed to appear across most of the state creating winter wheat and forage issues, explained Dennis Today, SDSU Extension Climate Specialist & South Dakota State Climatologist.

"Lack of precipitation has led to a number of agricultural issues," said Today. "If we don't receive adequate moisture in May, the issues could increase.

To clearly explain the climate outlook, Today begins by taking a look back at the year-to-date conditions.

A Look Back
April was very dry across most of South Dakota, with only a few weather locations to the west recording slightly above average precipitation. Total precipitation across the state ranged from 0.11-inches to just over 2-inches. The largest deficits were in the southeast where April was 2 inches or more below average, Today said, referencing precipitation totals in Chamberlain, 0.41 inches; and Mellette, 0.11 inches; which ended with their driest April on record.

Madison, Roscoe, and Big Stone City recorded their second driest April on record, and another 11 weather stations recorded April 2015 among the top five driest on record.

"The dry situation has been a continuation of a weather pattern that set up in February, which resulted in longer term precipitation deficits," Today said.

Records for low precipitation are much more apparent looking back for the year-to-date, explained Laura Edwards, SDSU Extension Climate Field Specialist.

She went on to say that as of Jan. 1, 2015 several weather stations in the middle of the state documented January 2015 as the driest on record including: DeSmet, Forestburg, Murdo, Kennebec, Pierre, Wessington Springs, Madison and six others. "A few stations accumulated less
