

New SDSU Extension Entomology Specialist

BROOKINGS, S.D. - Adam Varenhorst is the new SDSU Extension Entomology Specialist.

As an SDSU Extension Entomology Specialist, Varenhorst will inform South Dakota crop producers of impending pest issues they need to watch for in their fields; provide growers with the research-based best management practices for pest management in South Dakota; and conduct research.

"When insect issues get out of control, growers lose yields and ultimately profits. Adam brings research experience and a broad knowledge base to help South Dakota growers utilize the best practics when managing," said Alvaro Garcia, SDSU Extension Agriculture and Natural Resources Program Director.

More about Adam Varenhorst

Growing up on a farm in northwest Iowa, Varenhorst spent time scouting his family's fields for pests and truly understands the impact pest issues can have on a grower's bottom-line. However, it wasn't until he took an entomology class as an undergraduate at Briar Cliff University that he decided to focus his career on helping growers protect their crops and livelihoods from pests.

"Through that one class, I discovered a strong interest in insects. It changed my career path," Varenhorst said. "I discovered that as an entomologist I could incorporate my agriculture background with my new found interest in insects to help producers by providing them with research-based information that can provide management guidelines that ultimately protect yields."

Varenhorst received a master's and doctorate degree in Entomology from Iowa State University. He focused his research on the management of soybean aphids by using selective insecticides and host plant resistance.

Varenhorst joins the team of SDSU Extension staff who provide research-based information to South Dakotans as part of South Dakota State University's Land Grant mission. ■iGrow
